50 dollars in 1947 value today

Welcome to Friday! We had a very intense week of crazy freakin stories here on a sexy budget, so today I refused to get into anything deep :) In fact, let's start with a joke! (You can find more of them here too, btw, there are some very good ones) a tour guide showing a tourist around Washington, D.C. The guide pointed to where George Washington apparently threw a dollar off the Potomac River. It's impossible, the tourist said. No one could throw a coin that far! The guide replied, You have to remember. Umg leaving me reminds me of those people who say $1 million is not worth $1 million now, of course it's true, but it's still a weird million dollar! :) It's not like it's going to become less sexist in 20 years, you know? Maybe 200 years, but not until he retires (at least in my opinion). I swear I can handle it, Ely, who ;) You have to wait a while to prove you wrong, but I still accept you, Haha... You think you can live $1 million when you retire? You think you'll even have $1 million by the time you retire? Very odds against you unfortunately, but luckily you are reading this blog which automatically gives you bumps in likelihood;) And even more so if you ever created that millionaire to do the list! A much better chance of hitting your goals if you launch a good game plan. You're not gonna get rich fast, baby, now get out there and have a good weekend . Don't get any wooden nickels while you're there, Haha... Not that I know exactly why this is bad. My father was always there the day he ;) I actually like to see what wooden nickel looks like! Jay loves talking about money, collecting coins, blasting hip-hop, and hanging out with his three beautiful sons. You can download all your online jmoney.biz. Thanks for reading the blog! Today many of my blogger friends write on this – what would you do if you suddenly inherited a million dollars from Bertha's long lost cousin you haven't seen since you were a baby? We have a round up on Friday @yes, I'm cheap.This one is easy for me. If I inherited a cool million from Bertha's cousin on Sunday, I would not have been willing to work on Monday. Even after inheritance tax (10-20% of Google fast?) , the wind will shove enough for me to meet all my retired with 40 financial goals. Here they are for a quick review.1 million net worth of CheckAdditional 100k invested in the performance of checkAdditional portfolio production 50k cash CheckEven cash flow I'm pretty sure this will work. Only #4 is questionable here. Take a look at my June cash flow report and you can see that we are very close to positive cash flow. We just really need an extra $1000 in income at most. Let's see what we can do with $1,000,000! Forget taxes now as long as we are dreaming of .300k in safe dividends Stocks and mutual funds. We say the 4% yield is to net us $1,000 cash per month .500k on CDs. We put 100k in a 5-year-old CD every year so, we have about 100k available every year without penalty.200k left is fun money! We can travel around the world in style and visit all the places we've always wanted to see. We refer to the Egyptian pyramids, the Inca pyramids, the Taj Mahal and the Maldives to get started. Hmm.... In fact, it doesn't work because we just have positive cash flow if Ms. RB40 keeps working! Can he quit his job? We should instead generate about $2,600 in revenue + an additional $1,000. It's a taller order... We have to start over and see what we do with $1,000,000! Target = $3,600 cash flow .270k to pay off the mortgage – it will be released up to about $1,500/month, roughly halfway there!400k in safe high performance investment @4% to us about $1,300/month.300k in 5 years CD @ 2.5% net us $600 per month. Well, we're not there all the way. We are at $3,400/month, but I think that's good enough. I want to generate $3,600/month, but I think we can make it work. We only save $200 less a month. I think that's not a big deal at this point. I'm sure I can make $200 a month if I really need to. all right! We've got 30,000 money to play, I'm sure we can go see the pyramids, The Crown of Mahal and Maldives for 30,000 people, we have to stay in our regular 2 or 3-star hotels but maybe we can book one night in four seasons @ I guess it's a good thing because we have to avoid lifestyle inflation and save. Well, guys, you got it there. If a million dollars landed unexpectedly in our lap, on Monday you won't see Either Mr. or Mrs. RB40 in the office. This windy frees us to explore our emotions and enjoy some free time with the RB40 baby! what about you? What are you doing? Can you quit working for an extra $1,000? It's a lot of zeros, but it may not take 40 years without good planning. The following bilinguals change the following content. Today our team of experts is based on Wall Street from the south -- Charlotte, North Carolina -- as well as San Juan, Puerto Rico. About U.S. Personal Financial Reporter Personal Finance Reporter blackwaterimages/iStock/Getty Images Plus/Getty Images $1957 bill worth anywhere from $1 to $15 and possibly more if collectors need a specific bill. The dollar bill ratings are rated on a scale from very good to unsymed. A dollar bill that has been used and circulated heavy since 1957 is usually worth $1 or just above face value. The dollar bill is not used and is in full, mint status worth $15 as of June, 2014. Dollar bill prices are completely dependent on the conditions in which they On and whether they have a star serial number. Dollar bills with star serial numbers are generally worth about 1.5 times as many dollar bills as they do not contain the star serial number. It is important to note that a person holding the bill may be able to get more for it if they sell it to collectors. A collector seeking a specific bill, such as the 1957 one-dollar bill, may be willing to pay more than it is worth to help complete a collection. Anyone receiving the 1957 dollar bill, which is at least in moderate condition, should speak to local collectors to find out if there is any interest in the region for the dollar bill. Tom Cockrem/Lonely Planet Pictures/Getty Images to determine the value of a coin is necessary to visit specialized websites, research the value in current coin magazines or coins assessed by an expert. The overall value of the coin depends largely on the status of the coin. The value of a silver dollar in poor conditions is estimated at $28 in 1924, while a coin in mint status, by 2015, is valued at between $155 and $650. The silver dollar of 1924 is 90% silver and 10% copper and weighs 26.7 grams. Unless the coin is in good condition or mint the value of silver is likely greater than its value to sum the coin, depending on the current silver price. The 1924 Silver Dollar is also known as the Dollar of Peace and was designed by Anthony de Francisci. This coin features a release head in the profile on the coin's face and bald eagle in reverse. The dollar of peace was multiplied between 1921 and 1935 and has a raised relief design with ribbed edges. There is no mint sign on the reverse side of the coin, but 90% of the dollar coins of peace were minted in Philadelphia in 1924. More than 11,800,000 coins were multiplied. Most of the time, I have my financial home in very good shape. I follow my list of planned groceries at the grocery store, I don't spend a lot of money on things I don't need, I keep us on track with our family budget, I'm not ruining my kids with expensive things or experiences, I'm saving a lot for early retirement and maybe for a new home in the country. I enjoy free things in my community and at home. I take care of maintenance tasks and plan ahead for them. I make wonderful meals at home. I was satisfied with what I have and the abundance that my life gives me. Sometimes, though... Sometimes, I don't know. I disrupted my day completely by a series of unfortunate events and find myself in a grocery store trying to plan three or four days of meals on a flight with a five-year-old looking at me around asking me to add frozen chocolate mini wheat and Pepperidge goldfish farm in tang to the cart - and in frazzled mode, I do. I click send my order in the shopping cart at the online store at eleven hours at night because I just saw that they had a board game that I really wanted at a discount. Three days later the box arrives at my doorstep and I honestly don't In all that I ordered, but when I open the box, I wonder what I was thinking on the ground. I bought a bunch of Kindle books and then completely forgot that I ordered them, causing me to go way over my personal free spending budget for months. (I'm actually about this in detail not too long ago.) The next day, I looked at the standing library on the cover of that very just book sitting there waiting for free to be checked in the new publication section. I completely mess up my tracking of our family budget using you need funding, really disappointed with myself, enter things for a week, and then spend two or three hours repairing everything (more or less). I'll try to talk to myself to get my savings back a little bit. I will have this vague and unproven feeling in my head that we are saving too much and we don't live for today even though I'm happy with the things that are the vast majority of that time. I go to Des Moines and do something fun and needlessly expensive with some friends, even though I know of plenty of free and fun work to do so much the same day closer to home. I happen to put a grocery bag in the car because I was in a hurry while unloading things. The next day, something smelled strange in my vehicle and I discovered an uncomfortable packet of leaks of some kind of dairy product. The sludge has escaped across the back seat and is worth $20 of ruined food, along with a completely disrupted meal plan. I find myself on a road trip when the maintenance light lights are lit and I remember that I forgot to change my oil a few hundred miles ago because I added it to my calendar, so I'm stuck in Jiffy Loeb at seven o'clock at night in an unfamiliar city because it's still a better option than buying an oil pan and dealing with that mess. The passenger is somewhere in the parking lot. All because I couldn't remember to add a simple single job to my calendar. I hear my friend talking about the movie he just saw or the restaurant he just ate on and I suddenly had this great burning desire to see that movie or eat in that restaurant even though I had absolutely no desire to see a movie or eat before this conversation. Even worse, sometimes I go ahead and do it. I stand there trying to figure out what went wrong with this lasagna pan, then I realize that I accidentally set the oven to 450 F instead of 350 F, and as I drop the crisp remnants of a once delicious meal into the garbage, I find myself stuck between expensive options of getting some restaurant food or making another meal this evening. As well as intent as I may be, I make very big personal financial mistakes on a scary regular basis. Even though I know incredibly well what I have to do with my money at every turn, that doesn't mean I'm actually pulling those good moves. The truth is, I'm not perfect, but the truth is that if I expected perfection, I would only guarantee my own failure. why? I'm a human being. Human beings make mistakes and sometimes fail even with the best intentions. My goal is not perfection. My goal is to wake up tomorrow and do better than I do today. My goal is to make May better than April. My goal is to make 2015 better than in 2014. The difference between me and a person more successful than me is that the successful person gets just a little bit more than I would be on the spot. Same. This giant gap is not the difference, but it is enough so that if repeated every day, it will be added to many. I may have the right financial choice 90% of the time, but someone who makes the right choice 91% of the time is going to be just a little more successful today... And tomorrow is a little more successful. The difference is small -- maybe just a few cents or a dollar or two. But those dollars and penny are starting to come together a few dollars a day, over the course of a month, to add up to $100. Over the course of 10 years, it's tens of thousands of dollars. The one that makes it a little more than me is way ahead of me. My goal is not perfection. My goal is to move from that guy 90 percent to that guy 91 percent. I mean, when I fail, I don't beat myself up. That doesn't mean I'm a failure. i mean , i was wrong . It's really, really tempting to look at a mistake and let me define as a complete failure in what I'm trying to achieve in a broader sense. If I can't, say, look for a grocery list, then I have to say that I can't possibly spend less than I earn, which I can then continue to believe that my big financial goals are disappointing... And use it all as an excuse to stop trying. It's stupid. i made a mistake , but we dont fail . I'm like a runner stuck my thumbs up on a sidewalk crack, that doesn't mean I'm going to stop running. This just means I avoid those pavements in the future or maybe a pair of better shoes. I'm still going back out there and continuing to run, a mistake doesn't define me as a failure. It defines me as human. That is, we're looking for the reasons for that mistake. Why did I make that mistake? What circumstances caused this to happen? Like when I was tired, I let myself use my credit card? Maybe I made the poor choice of going to the store with my five-year-old when I wasn't ready to turn that grocery shopping trip into a teaching experience. Every mistake I make happens for a reason. They're because of my inability to handle a situation well. The mistakes he makes are right if I'm willing to sit back, study and find a better way to do things. Answering Why did I do this? doesn't expose me as a fundamentally flawed person. Instead it exposes something in my life that I can work to correct. I mean, finding ways to repeat that next time . Yeah, I screwed up today. That doesn't mean I'm gonna have to screw up like this tomorrow... Or next week... Or next month... or always again . If I recognize that mistake and what caused it, I can find a way to never darken that mistake again in the future. I may not be perfect, but that doesn't mean I have to repeat the same mistakes over and over again. Instead of mixing old and new mistakes, I'd rather just make new mistakes. And with every little day that passes, I hope to move slowly from Mr. 90 percent to Mr. 91 percent. I don't expect - or even want - Mr 100%.Mr 91% will do. Do.
